What Can I Get Out Of College

This is a question each of us should have asked ourselves throughout the past few years. Now, as we graduate, we must make the final appraisal. What did we get out of college? Our answer reflects on our education, but most of all it reflects upon ourselves.

Anxious to be part of the adult world and yet afraid to step from the security of youth, we all go through stages of over-confidence and self-consciousness. As uncomfortable as they seem, how very important these phases are to eventual maturity. By daring to do the things we are forbidden to do, by trying and testing and seeking our own answers, we become individuals, alike only in the sense of a common goal - Adulthood.

At the same time our awkward experiences with those around us force us to take a better look at ourselves - at who we are. How many times do we stop and ask, "Why am I here?" or "What do I really feel about this or that?" or "Where am I going?" If we can be summed up as possessing one general quality, it would be the continuous exploration of the life in and around us. If we can be summed up as having one desire, it would be to become part of that life.

Much of our life seems to revolve around that which is essential for our physical well-being. Our lives move in the cycle of eating,

sleeping,

studying,

playing and relaxing that is so necessary for us to function.

*We were made aware that the school
was filled with fascinating people,*

*all of them individuals
with hidden qualities,
both good and bad.*

We found how easy it was to ridicule those who were enthusiastic or different, yet we knew that those who took chances matured faster.

School sports are a major part of our experiences during college.

But for the members in these sports, it is a whole world - of unity, of a common goal, of joys and sorrows shared.

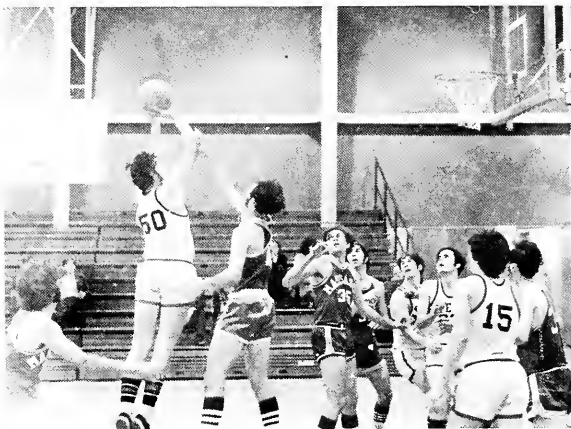

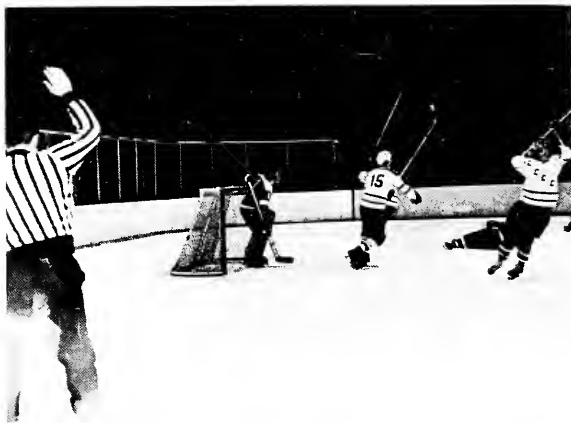

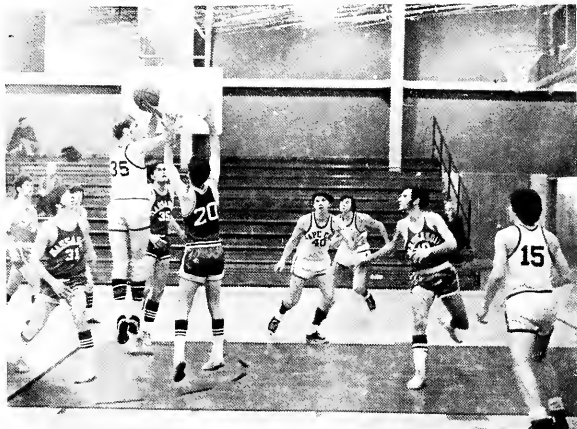

It is sweat, tired muscles, broken bones.

It is the splendor of competition,

pride, pain, and the thrill of victory

that fuse players into devoted teams . . .

Whose success or failure depends as much on their great coaches as on the members own stubborn drive and teamwork.

These things make us one . . .

One body . . .

One school . . .

One team.

The various clubs and organizations that we became part of during these years of college draws each of us out of our separate worlds of "me", to the vastly rewarding worlds of "you" and "us".

As we learn the opinions of others . . .

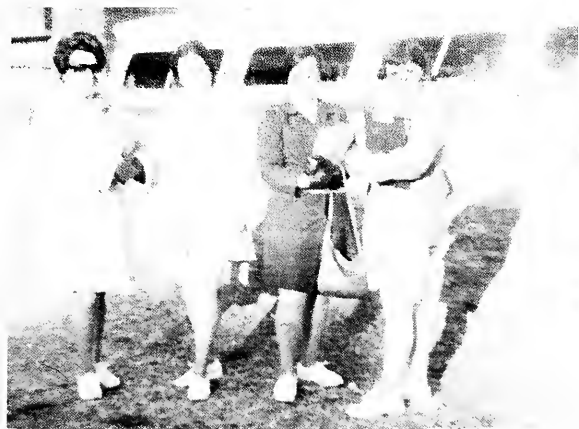

and witness the blending of ideas into finished products - a play, a yearbook, a special project, or just a better understanding of mankind . . .

*A man not ashamed to shed a tear
A life built on love
Holding opinion sacred; individuality dear*

*A man not afraid to speak his mind
A lover of spirit
Ever hopeful; ever trusting in mankind*

*A man dedicated to developing thought
A vague discontent
A niche in the wall of life unsought*

*A man never mindful of frustration or fear
A quiet room
The humble shedding of a tear*

*One who rejoices to see knowledge grow
Unlimited wisdom
To learn more than one man can possibly know*

*Joyful, though moody in spirit
Dedicated in mind
This is a man - symbol of all mankind.*

professors are emotional too.

On an occasional bad day, it is not easy to hide one's feelings within and walk into a room to face thirty laughing, shouting students.

However, they do;

*and they have earned our simply for being themselves . . .

and so willing to help.

Often we had to get away from it all,

We learned the responsibility of choosing our courses, friends,

even things from vending machines and as we mature, we become more perceptive, understanding. and aware.

a year, two years, more.
At a time when we must

strangely
we look

to places
to faces
we leave behind.

Stranger yet
what we leave behind
we take along
engrained, enmeshed, immersed,
part of that silly word
that minuscule, omnipresent word
Education.
